Isaac Albéniz arr. Victor Lopez Legend of Asturias

Spanish composer Isaac Albéniz (1860 - 1909) wrote his Asturias for solo piano. Then its Spanish spirit and guitar-like flair caused it to take up residence in the guitar repertoire. Arranger Victor Lopez brings it to yet another canvas: orchestral strings. Lopez condenses the score somewhat, though he also makes minor expansions to some transitional passages. One also finds solo violin phrases in the lyrical middle section, at times in dialog with section violas. However, the driving pulse of the opening and closing pages endure. In this new form, beloved Asturias is still recognizably itself.

Isaac Albéniz arr. Victor Lopez Leyenda de Asturias

El compositor español Isaac Albéniz (1860 - 1909) escribió su Asturias para piano solo. Luego, su ánimo español y su aire guitarrístico hicieron que se instalara en el repertorio para guitarra. El arreglista Víctor López la lleva a otro lienzo: las cuerdas orquestales. López condensa un poco la partitura, aunque también realiza pequeñas ampliaciones en algunos pasajes de transición. También encontramos frases de violín solista en la lírica sección central, a veces en diálogo con violas de sección. Sin embargo, el pulso impulsor de las páginas iniciales y finales perdura. Aunque sea en esta nueva forma, las calidades que hizo especial el original Asturias siguen siendo presente.

Florence Price arr. Dana Perna The Old Boatman

The title and the flowing, nostalgic mood of The Old Boatman might lead one to suppose that African American composer Florence Price (1887 - 1953) had borrowed the tune from a spiritual. It sounds like something her working-class ancestors might have sung on a quiet evening. However, the notes she put upon the page were not for singing. Rather, it was part of a set of solo piano pieces she wrote in 1951 for student use. Taking it one step further and arranging it for orchestral strings, as arranger Dana Perna has done, carries on that purpose. Central pages are more ornamented than the opening and closing material. However, even there, the challenge is less in the notes themselves than in the expressive colors one would hope to evoke. In this brief, humble little work, there are feelings to explore.

Florence Price arr. Dana Perna El viejo barquero

Uno se podría adivinar del título y el ambiente fluido y nostálgico de The Old Boatman que la compositora afroamericana Florence Price (1887 - 1953) tomó prestada la melodía de un espiritual. Suena como algo que sus antepasados de clase trabajadora podrían haber cantado en una tarde tranquila. Sin embargo, las notas que puso en la página no eran para cantar. Más bien formaba parte de un conjunto de piezas para piano solo que escribió en 1951 para uso de los estudiantes. Llevándola un paso más allá y arreglándola para cuerdas orquestales, como ha hecho la arreglista Dana Perna, continúa con ese propósito. Las páginas centrales están más ornamentadas que el material de apertura y cierre. Sin embargo, incluso ahí, el reto está menos en las notas en sí que en los colores expresivos que uno espera evocar. En esta breve y humilde obra, hay sentimientos que explorar.

Ludwig van Beethoven arr. Richard Meyer Symphony No. 5 in C Minor, Op. 67

The opening of Beethoven's Symphony no. 5 is surely the most famous set of four notes ever imagined by mankind. Throughout the work, Beethoven runs that four-note pattern through myriad different forms, showing how much can be made of humble materials. Arranger Richard Meyer goes one step further. He takes the triumphant closing movement of Beethoven's symphony, abridges it and smooths out many of the dotted rhythms. Here, it becomes more gracious than imposing, well-suited for the string orchestra instrumentation that Meyer chose. It's less assertive than Beethoven's original, but that fact lets one give more attention to the subtle colors of blended string voices. One needn't have shouting brass instruments to bring Beethoven's sunlit tune into listeners' hearts.

Ludwig van Beethoven arr. Richard Meyer Sinfonía no. 5 en do menor, op. 67

La apertura de la Sinfonía n.º 5 de Beethoven es seguramente el conjunto de cuatro notas más famosas jamás imaginado por la humanidad. A lo largo de la obra, Beethoven recorre ese patrón de cuatro notas a través de innumerables formas diferentes, demostrando lo mucho que se puede hacer con materiales humildes. El arreglista Richard Meyer va un paso más allá. Toma el triunfante movimiento final de la sinfonía de Beethoven, lo abrevia y suaviza muchos de los ritmos punteados. Aquí, se vuelve más amable que imponente, muy adecuado para la instrumentación de orquesta de cuerda que Meyer eligió. Es menos asertivo que el original de Beethoven, pero ese hecho permite prestar más atención a los sutiles colores de las voces de cuerdas mezcladas. No es necesario que los instrumentos de viento griten para que la soleada melodía de Beethoven llegue al corazón de los oyentes.

Ludwig van Beethoven Egmont Overture, Op. 84

Beethoven's Egmont Overture (1810) is from his incidental music for a production of Goethe's play of the same name. The drama tells of the historical Count Egmont, a Flemish patriot of the mid-16th century, a time when the Low Countries lay under the rule of Spain's King Philip II. Its famed overture begins with a single thunderous chord, followed by ominous strings and wistful woodwinds. A sense of motion gradually develops with ever increasing urgency, as if the time for action was approaching. Becoming stronger and more determined with each passing minute, the music is often colored with splashes of heroic horns. At last, there is a resolute charge into battle, with energetic rhythms and a spirit of victory. On hearing the overture's final lines, one could be excused for supposing Egmont will triumph. Alas, he shall not, though his name is still reverently remembered by many Flemish people.

Ludwig van Beethoven Obertura Egmont, op. 84

La Obertura Egmont (1810) de Beethoven pertenece a su música incidental para una producción de la obra homónima de Goethe. El drama narra la historia del conde Egmont, un patriota flamenco de mediados del siglo XVIIth, época en la que los Países Bajos se hallaban bajo el dominio del rey español Felipe II. Su famosa obertura comienza con un único acorde atronador, seguido de ominosas cuerdas y melancólicas maderas. Poco a poco se va desarrollando una sensación de movimiento cada vez más apremiante, como si se acercara la hora de la acción. La música, cada vez más fuerte y decidida, se colorea a menudo con salpicaduras de trompas heroicas. Al final, se produce una resuelta carga hacia la batalla, con ritmos enérgicos y espíritu de victoria. Al escuchar los versos finales de la obertura, se podría suponer que Egmont triunfará. Desgraciadamente, no lo hará, aunque su nombre sigue siendo recordado con veneración por muchos flamencos.

Florence Price Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Mvmts. II & III

Born in Arkansas, Florence Beatrice Smith Price (1887 - 1953) was generations ahead of her time: an African American woman from the southern states who successfully pursued a career as a classical composer. Training at Boston's New England Conservatory was a crucial step, as was her later decision to relocate to Chicago. The vibrant African American community there encouraged public performance of Price's music, and her Symphony no. 1 was presented by the Chicago Symphony at the 1933 World's Fair. Price balanced expectations of what a so-called symphony was supposed to do with a strong awareness of her ethnic heritage. So as Mozart or Beethoven or Brahms often did, she gives her second movement Largo maestoso a calm and song-like mood. Third movements were usually dance-like in mood, and so is Price's Juba Dance. However, the song-like flow of her second movement suggests thoughtful spirituals more than love songs, and the bright and sassy mood of her third movement is borrowed from dances that the Viennese masters had never imagined. The symphony is American in flavor, moreover, African American, and from the mind and imagination of a southern woman. Florence Price was truly a pioneer!

Florence Price

Sinfonía no. 1 en mi menor - movimientos II y III

Nacida en Arkansas, Florence Beatrice Smith Price (1887-1953) fue una adelantada a su tiempo: una mujer afroamericana de los estados del sur que hizo carrera como compositora clásica. Su formación en el Conservatorio de Nueva Inglaterra de Boston fue un paso crucial, al igual que su posterior decisión de trasladarse a Chicago. La vibrante comunidad afroamericana de la ciudad alentó la interpretación pública de la música de Price, y su Sinfonía n.º 1 fue presentada por la Sinfónica de Chicago. Fue presentada por la Sinfónica de Chicago en la Feria Mundial de 1933. Price equilibró las expectativas de hacer una supuesta sinfonía con una fuerte conciencia de su herencia étnica. Así, como Mozart, Beethoven o Brahms hacían a menudo, dota a su Largo maestoso del segundo movimiento de un ambiente tranquilo y canoro. Los terceros movimientos solían ser bailables, como la Danza Juba de Price. Sin embargo, la fluidez cancioneril de su segundo movimiento sugiere espírituales reflexivos más que canciones de amor, y el humor brillante y descarado de su tercer movimiento está tomado de danzas que los maestros vieneses nunca hubieran imaginado. Además, la sinfonía tiene sabor americano, afroamericano, y procede de la mente y la imaginación de una mujer sureña. Florence Price fue una pionera auténtica.

Pablo de Sarasate

Zigeunerweisen, Op. 20

The title is German, though the composer was Spanish, and the melodies are those of the Romany people. By happenstance, virtuoso violinist/composer Pablo de Sarasate (1844 - 1908) had a German publisher. He did not, apparently, have Romany blood, though thanks in large part to Bizet's opera Carmen (1875), the spirited music of the people known at that time as Gypsies was greatly in vogue. Whether or not one quoted genuine gypsy melodies, it was enough to evoke the rhythmic intensity of such works, and if one could bring in a solo violin, so much the better. Dating from 1878, Sarasate's Ziguernerweisen opens with a dramatic introduction, seizing the audience's attention and leading to a series of melodies that showcase both the soloist's technique and the ability to coax poignant expression from the instrument. The pyrotechnic finale serves up electric excitement which might be Romany but perhaps also Iberian. Sarasate was a native of Pamplona. All in all, Zigeunerweisen is great fun for listeners and performers alike.

Pablo de Sarasate

Zigeunerweisen, Op. 20

El título es alemán, aunque el compositor era español, y las melodías son las del pueblo gitano. Por casualidad, el virtuoso violinista y compositor Pablo de Sarasate (1844-1908) tenía un editor alemán. Al parecer, no tenía sangre gitana, aunque gracias en gran parte a la ópera Carmen (1875) de Bizet, la animada música del pueblo conocido en aquella época como gitanos estaba muy de moda. Citara o no auténticas melodías gitanas, bastaba con evocar la intensidad rítmica de tales obras, y si se podía aportar un violín solista, tanto mejor. El Ziguernerweisen de Sarasate, que data de 1878, se abre con una introducción dramática que capta la atención del público y da paso a una serie de melodías que ponen de manifiesto tanto la técnica del solista como su capacidad para extraer una expresión conmovedora del instrumento. El pirotécnico final ofrece una emoción eléctrica que podría ser romaní, pero quizá también ibérica. Sarasate era natural de Pamplona. En resumen, Zigeunerweisen es una gran diversión tanta para los oyentes como para los intérpretes.
